MOKENA CIVIC GROUP SEEKS TO GET FLASHERS

The Mokena Civic Association had a most interesting meeting Monday evening in the Hatch Hall.

Adolph Steen head of the Boy Scout Committee reported that the Scouts are learning about the American flag, its history, what it stands for, etc. This class will continue for ten weeks. Each member of the class is given a flag pin.

ASK R. I. FOR FLASHERS

The Civic Association is taking the matter up with the Rock Island railroad for the installation of electric flashers at the depot and Wolf Road crossings.

PURCHASE BICYCLE RACK

The Association voted to purchase a bicycle rack for 22 bicycles which will be presented to the Mokena public school.

A Memorial Day committee was appointed as follows: Wm. Semmler, chairman, R. A. Bechstein and Arthur Shoop. All the organizations in the community will be asked to take some active part in the memorial program.

PLANS BEING MADE FOR ANNUAL HOME COMING

Plans were also discussed for the 1941 Home Coming. Committees are being formed and an early start is being aimed for.

GIVES INTERESTING TALK

Arthur Shoop gave a very interesting talk on "Industrial Relations" in big corporations as it effects the employee and employer and fully detailed how plans are worked out that benefit employer and employee. Mr. Shoop is in the employ of Swift & Co. The plan is to have a member give a talk at each meeting on some special subject. At the March meeting Milton Geuther will speak on "Soil Conservation."

As the speaker for the America First Committee did not charge for coming here and addressing the anti war meeting sponsored by the Civic Association, the Association voted to turn what usually would be the customary fee over to the America First Committee as a donation.

Homer Couple Celebrate Silver Wedding Day

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Konow held open house to their many friends and relatives on Sunday afternoon and evening in honor of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. A bounteous dinner was served at noon to 43 relatives and close friends. A large wedding cake, adorned with a bride and groom made a very attractive centerpiece for the table, as did also, a large bouquet of carnations and ferns presented the bride of 25 years by the groom.

The honored ones were presented with many gifts, amongst them was a purse of silver and also a blooming plant, with several silver buds, each of which contained many silver coins.

Cards, dancing and a social time was enjoyed; Otto Konow Jr. furnishing the music for the dancing.

The guest list at dinner included: Mr. and Mrs. Herman Konow, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hilbert and children Shirley and Harry of Niles, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Moak of Joliet; Miss Lucille Dwyer Joliet; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koerner, Jr. and Mrs. W. F. Koerner of Joliet; Mr. and Mrs. Emil Simandl and daughter Evelyn of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ott and daughter, Lucille of Lockport; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wies, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wies and daughter, Kay; Mr. and Mrs. Otto Konow, son of Otto and daughters Florence and Lila, George Bump, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kolar and daughter, Marion; Mr. and Mrs. Hans Warnsholdt and daughter, Katie; all of Homer, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jungles of Lemont, the former having been best man at the wedding were also present for the dinner and celebration.

Free Entertainment At Frankfort Mon.

A program of free entertainment and colored moving pictures will be given in the Frankfort school auditorium Monday evening, Feb. 24 at 7:30 o'clock sponsored by A. C. Bauch for Allis-Chalmers and John Weitendorf for Mobil Gas.

Edw. Reno, magician, will also be on the program. Free refreshments. Everybody welcome.

Frankfort Lions Plan For Charter Night

The Frankfort Lions Club held a social meeting in the Frankfort Methodist church parlors Tuesday evening. Following the supper and a community sing, colored movies of a Canadian fishing trip were shown and were very interesting. A number of members of the Joliet Lions Club were present. At the close of the program a business session was held and plans discussed for the Lions Club charter night to be held March 4th. About 200 guests are expected to be present at this affair. More details later.

Legislative News

For the information of those interested I desire to advise that I have been appointed Chairman of the Committee on Education in the legislature. Many school people requested my appointment due to my service as such in the last session. In the mass of information and news items from Springfield as presented in the Metropolitan Press, news of committee appointments are not always made clear. In addition to this appointment I hold membership on seven other committees, including Civil Service, Industrial Affairs, Elections, Municipalities.

The legislature has been in session a few weeks and bills are coming in but not quite so numerous as in other years.

One of the more dramatic events of the session has been action on Joint Resolution No. 6 presented by me seeking to protest against the power given the President under H. R. 1776. Without opposing aid to Britain many people have thought that the power to do so should rest with the Congress rather than to be turned over entirely to the Executive. During the time the resolution was in committee awaiting action the lower house in Washington passed H. R. 1776 with many amendments that would materially reduce the power originally intended to be given the President and so it was necessary to hold the Resolution for amendments to bring it up to date. However it has served its purpose in arousing public sentiment in Illinois against the possibility of sending American men to fight in foreign wars, which many people have feared was in the mind of the President when he asked for this unprecedented grant of power.

The fact that the administration in Washington constantly beats down amendments providing that no men shall be sent to fight in a foreign war adds to the apprehension of people all over the nation and causes them to call 1776 a war bill. On this I have protested in every way available. This is a power no one man should have in our country.

Among the bills of interest to the Metropolitan area is the so called super highway bill presented by Chicago officials. This is so far reaching in its provisions that I am sure every municipality in this area will be heard from in addition to the county officials. More about this later.

The bill relative to township collectors was passed with amendments providing that the matter should remain as it is unless by referendum the people decide otherwise. This is a favorite refuge of members who enjoy sitting on the fence but it is a logical procedure when two opposing groups descend upon the members. If it can be compromised and everyone satisfied so much the better.

A new rule now makes it necessary to post a hearing on any bill twenty-four hours before the time set. This will slow things up a little but it does provide that all sides shall be heard and certainly no one can object to this who believes in a government by the people.

The speaker, Mr. E. J. Sennackenberg, is proving a good choice and is rated a fair and impartial presiding officer. Several members have been ill and empty desks are noted through the hall.

The speaker says again we hope to get through with a short session but doubt in the light of other years whether it can be done.

—Lottie Holman O'Neill.

In observing the birthday of the Father of Our Country we should remember his wise admonition to stay out of entangling alliances in European affairs and we should all work toward that end that our political leaders in Washington be restrained from making us a party to the age old quarrels of Europe and from taking sides in their narrow minded hates. America must retain the wise consuls of Washington if we are to remain a free nation and not become a vassal of Europe.

We need men like Washington, and his co-patriots more today than we have since the days of the American Revolution.

We must be American and only American and look to it that America truly stays the land of the free.

Frankfort Air Cadet Has One Big Worry: Gaining Weight

After a year in the United States Army Air Corps, Robert Mitchell of Frankfort, has become an upper classman at Randolph field in Texas and is mastering the technique of night and instrument flying.

Letters to his mother, Mrs. Blanch Mitchell, report steady progress since he was transferred from Selfridge to Randolph field slightly more than a month ago. He had his first solo flight in an army plane on January 11 and began instruction in "blind flying" last week.

"This is done when you have a hood over your head and fly by instruments alone," he explained. "The instructor sits up front and observes how you fly a ship when you can't see the ground."

The flying cadets wear uniforms of blue, resembling those of West Pointers. On dress parade they are also decked out in white gloves. But their status as cadets doesn't relieve them of drill duty and rifle inspection.

Recreations at the Texas camp include bowling, ping pong, basketball, football, trapshooting, golfing, movies—and even occasional tea dances in nearby hotels, Mitchell reported. He has only one worry:

"The food here is too good—I went up from 173 when I weighed in at Selfridge field to 191 now. The doctor said I would have to come down before I could get my lieutenant commission, as I am nine pounds over the maximum weight."

To Entertain Distinguished Guests

Next Wednesday, Feb. 26th the Tinley Park Woman's club will be honored to have as their guests at their regular monthly meeting, two Third District chairmen.

The morning session which convenes at 10:30 o'clock, Mrs. R. E. Pfeiffer, Press and Publicity district chairman will be the guest. She will present an original play entitled, "The General Federation Has A Birthday." Members of the Calumet City Junior Club will assist in this presentation. Come out and give our visitors a real Tinley Park welcome. Mrs. Wm. Semmler with Mrs. Walter Eichelberg co-operating is chairman of this part of the program.

The Literature Department with Mrs. Roy Hannum as chairman is responsible for the afternoon meeting, starting at two o'clock when Mrs. Robert S. Houts, 3rd District chairman of the Literature Department will be the guest.

Mrs. Houts will reveal "Quietly My Captain Waits", by Evelyn Eden. Club women are anticipating a treat, since many have heard Mrs. Houts in "The American Way" and other splendidly given reviews of books.

New Restaurant Opens In Mokena

A new restaurant will open in Mokena Saturday morning of this week when Morry Larson will open up his new eating place. He will serve lunches and meals, home made pies, etc. The restaurant will open at 6 a. m.

Orland Legion Post To Hold A Novel Dance

A novel dance will be sponsored by Orland Park Post 526, American Legion on Saturday evening, February 22nd at Goodings Grove hall on 143rd street four miles west of Orland Park.

According to Commander W. C. Freck, this "Ball" will be unusual in many ways. The Post has engaged a popular Chicago Night Club orchestra which will give "tops" in entertainment.

One of the various features is "every other dance a Waltz" which will enable the younger folks to have their "fast" music and the more conventional "waltz time" for the middleaged people.

There will be two elimination contests later on in the evening, one for the "Jitterbugs" and one for the "waltzers" with appropriate prizes for the winners.

Another unusual attraction is a "Noel Coward" comedy skit, presented by professional actors and actresses. Balloons, crepe paper hats, etc., will be given out at the entrance. This affair brings to our local community entertainment of the highest class and will be enjoyed by everyone attending.

Admission fees have not been increased despite the extra cost. This Legion Post cordially extends an invitation to all residents to attend an affair they will long remember. Refreshments will be served until closing time at 2:30 a. m.

The GRAND MARCH will start promptly at 9:30 p. m., so be there early to see all the merriment. Do not miss it!

Westinghouse Festival At Tinley Big Success

The Westinghouse Festival and Entertainment given by the Bettenhausen Hardware was well attended by about 500 people. The evening was spent with a full program. Henry Bettenhausen opened the meeting and introduced Mr. Harry Yodden as the "Mixer" Toast Master for the evening. The program featured a variety of entertainment. Miss Warsaw, Home Economist of Public Service demonstrated the oven meal in the electric roaster and gave a demonstration on the ironer. Barbara Ann Freitag very ably performed a tap dance on roller skates, a twirling baton number and solo. Carl Garster and Lois Wallen gave several tap numbers which were also well rendered. The Rothenberg Sisters gave several vocal numbers accompanied on their guitar. Mr. Shurcliff and Mr. Ervine of the Westinghouse Supply Co., gave interesting talks on the features of the electric refrigerators and ranges. The moving picture in technicolor stressed the foundation of careful construction, followed by a comedy sketch.

Banker Gives Talk

Tuesday eve, this week R. J. Drolet, of the First Trust and Savings Bank of Kankakee was the speaker at the Father and Son banquet held by the Brotherhood in the St. John Evangelical church in Mokena. Wild Auto Crashes Into Orland Tavern

Last Sunday morning about 5:30 o'clock the Robert Ebeling family occupying a flat in the Zerbs building directly over the George Yunker tavern on 143rd street in Orland Park was awakened by a terrific crash which shook the building and the sound of breaking glass. This was followed with a cloud of steam arising from downstairs. At first the family thought it was an earthquake.

Mr. and Mrs. George Yunker occupying a rear flat in the same building were also awakened by the terrific crash and upon investigation it was discovered that an automobile coming south on the Southwest highway had failed to make the turn onto 143rd street and ran into the front of the building. A portion of a brick wall was moved in and a big window was shattered. A radiator in front of the window had also been broken off causing the escaping steam to fill the building.

In the car, a 1940 Ford, the driver later identified as Wm. J. Poterlin, 9957 Exchange ave., Chicago was found unconscious. He had sustained a broken leg, head and chest injuries. The county police were called and he was taken to the Oak Forest Infirmary hospital.

The front of the car was crushed like an egg shell. It was removed to the Zerbs garage next door.

Poterlin was alone in the car at the time of the accident.

The damage to the building is estimated between $300 and $500.

City of London Financial 'Hub' Of British Empire

Great Commercial Center Selected as Target By Bombers.

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
WASHINGTON. — The compact "downtown" financial district of London known as the City, which is the special target for German raiders' incendiary bombs and the scene of England's greatest fire in three centuries, has been acclaimed one of the most important commercial areas of its size in the world.

The irregular semicircle of ancient streets beside the Thames known as the City is only one square mile in area, but for centuries it has set the financial pace of the world, according to the National Geographic society.

The Bank of England, known as the exclusive "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," sits in the midst of it—a private institution which since 1694 has had the exclusive right to issue England's paper money and to hold the reserve funds of all other banks in the country. A coin's throw to the east on Throgmorton street, stands the Stock exchange, which deals in the government bonds of its own and foreign countries, and in the stocks of most important corporations of the world.

London's "Wall Street." Throgmorton street becomes the "curb market" for trading in American securities during the daily interval between the closing of the London exchange and the closing five hours later of New York's stock market. Lombard street, noted for its banks, adjoins Threadneedle and Throgmorton streets to form the "Wall street" district of London.

Lloyd's of London, a short walk east of Leadenhall street, in 250 years has grown to be the world's largest insurance institution. It is an association of underwriters. Within the area also are the famous old financial house of Rothschild, and the even older Child's bank, which Dickens described in his "Tale of Two Cities" as Tellson's bank.

Within vast metropolitan London, whose 8,000,000 people have spread their buildings over 692 square miles, the "City" is a tight little center packed inside ancient boundaries like an English walnut in its shell. It reaches from the Inns of Court and Fleet street in the west to the Tower of London in the east, from London bridge north to Clerkenwell road. This is the oldest part of London. Through 20 centuries it has preserved its identity and practically its original limits, thanks to the thick wall 35 feet high built around it by Roman conquerors.

Remnants of this frequently rebuilt wall and its nine gates are responsible for the names of such streets as London Wall, Newgate, Aldgate, and Cripplegate, as well as Billingsgate Market. The wall enabled City dwellers to hold off William the Conqueror, who prudently built his Tower of London just outside the City. Since then, no sovereign has lived within the City. The king today first receives permission from the lord mayor of London before passing the spots, such as the Temple Bar, where modern streets cross the City's antique boundaries.

'City' Deserted at Night. Historic and literary landmarks, some dating from Roman times, fill the City, barely a yard apart. By night the district is usually deserted, since almost the only permanent residents are the custodians or watchmen of buildings which are treasured by the Empire for their past or present significance. By day, however, a million people daily crowd in and out of this small area on business.

The volume of news dispatched from the newspaper offices of Fleet street in normal times makes this a world center for journalism as well as finance.

This same square mile of London's inner core was the birthplace of John Milton, Sir Thomas More, Charles Lamb, and William Penn. It was the residence of Chaucer, and was visited by countless notables who were involved in the literary activities of Grub street or Paternoster row. There at 17 Gough square, Dr. Johnson wrote his epochal dictionary of the English language.

A few blocks south, within the high paneled walls of Middle Temple hall, on February 2, 1602, a troupe of actors presented a comedy by one of their company, a newcomer named Shakespeare; it was "Twelfth Night," destined for Broadway in 1941.

Famous Men Lived in Area. A physician at old St. Bartholomew's hospital, which had been founded by a king's jester, discovered the circulation of the blood—William Harvey. Meanwhile, in the Fifteenth-century Guildhall, successive lord mayors were elected and banqueting under the traditional but mysterious figures of Gog and Magog. Another landmark of the region was the Cheshire Cheese, the inn made famous by Dr. Johnson and Boswell. The Old Bailey, site of London's modern criminal courts, has associations with the old debtors' prison and the execution place where malefactors were hanged or burned at the stake; the last burning took place in 1789.

John Bunyan, William Blake, and Daniel Defoe wandered through the City to a common burial place on its northern fringes. Other tombs in the district include those of John Wesley, the Methodist founding father, and George Fox, first Quaker.

Both traffic and tradition center of the City is St. Paul's cathedral, "the empire's parish church." Names of the knotted streets of the City are almost unbelievably quaint: Stew lane, Friday street, Budge row, Knighttrider street, Red Lion court, and Fetter lane.

Workers' Income Rises as Expenses Stay at 1936 Level

Increased Buying Power Reflected in High Store Sales.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Spreading payrolls from roaring defense industries have hoisted the American family's buying power to new recovery heights, a current family buying-power survey reveals. The average urban worker's household saw its monthly income soar nearly $7 in the last six months of 1940, while household expenses remained at 1936 levels, according to a current family buying-power study.

The favorable margin between average earnings and living costs is the largest in the eight-year history of the company's index, according to the survey conducted by the Northwestern National Life Insurance company. Record department store trade volume, and improved installment collection ratios reflect this greater net buying power in the hands of the American consumer.

Living costs sank to a low for the year in October, and have been far outstripped by the rise in industrial pay checks, the report states.

Measuring the effects of payroll and living cost changes on the American pocketbook, the study shows that an average employed worker's family of four, with earnings of $120 at average 1933 payroll levels and spending the same amount for its living expenses at average 1933 retail prices, had to pay $131.11 in June, 1936, to maintain the same standard of living; meanwhile the family pay check had climbed to $133.92.

In June, 1940, the same standard of living for a family of four cost $131.86, while the family's pay check had climbed to $150.86; by the year-end, the monthly pay check had rocketed almost another $7, to $157.49, while living costs had actually fallen $1.10 from June levels, totalling $130.76 in December, 1940, or practically the same as in mid-1936, the report shows.

Thus the great increase in payrolls in recent months has meant a net increase in American spending power, the report points out, as total living costs are the same as they were a year ago, and actually less than they were last summer. Minor increases in clothing and fuel, have been offset by the decline in food prices, the study shows.

Army Mechanic Rescues

Navy Aviator in Desert RANDOLPH FIELD, TEXAS.—If it had happened in the movies, audiences would have shrieked in disbelief.

Technical Sergeant O. A. Miller, veteran air corps mechanic, of Randolph field, Texas, was driving across the Arizona desert not far from Gila Bend. Suddenly a navy training plane sputtered overhead and then glided to earth on the desert wastes, just off the highway.

"Forced landing . . . Motor quit," explained the navy pilot to Sergeant Miller. With the aid of his auto tool kit, the army man proceeded to "trouble shoot" the ailing engine. In a couple of hours it was purring smoothly again.

A passing motorist was pressed into service to halt any stray traffic that might happen along on the road, the plane was taxied onto the highway and after a final check, Sergeant Miller turned it over to the navy man, who used the roadbed for a runway to get into the air.

A very nice letter of appreciation was received by Sergeant Miller a few days later from the navy pilot who had been assisted from what might have been a rather hazardous situation. The signature at the close of the note of thanks . . . Robert E. Lee, Ensign, USNR.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by CARTER FIELD

Defense delays caused by inter-union strife may bring congressional intervention . . . "Aluminum shortage" caused by technical limitations. (Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON. — Feeling about strikes which impede the national defense program is rising in congress. It is far too soon to predict what may be the ultimate result, but it is important to note that presidential as well as congressional patience is beginning to show signs of giving out.

What fans the flame is that so many strikes, and threatened strikes, have nothing whatever to do with working conditions, pay or even hours of the workers.

What annoys officials and congressmen vitally interested in the defense program most are the so-called jurisdictional strikes, and particularly strikes which result solely from rivalry between the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O.

For instance, right across the street, practically, from a zinc smelter in St. Louis it is proposed to build another zinc smelter. But immediately it becomes impossible to proceed because both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. want their union members to do the masonry work! So the defense program will have to struggle along without enough zinc, just because of a controversy as to which union will have the franchise for supplying workers on this particular construction.

SHIPBUILDING VITAL

If anyone thinks that does not breed sentiment for some curb on strikes in connection with defense contracts, the person holding that opinion has no conception of the war temper in Washington—for war temper it is. And while the end is not in sight, there is a good deal of truth in that old saying about the "straw which broke the camel's back."

More irritating by far to the average member of congress, particularly those of the large majority who want this country to use every effort available to produce needed supplies, are the strikes affecting shipbuilding. Even the least technically minded of congressmen realize the vital need for speedy construction of ships to carry supplies to Britain, in view of the considerable success which the submarines, dive bombers, mines and commerce raiders have had in destroying bottoms needed for that purpose.

So when every few days your senator or representative reads of a new walkout on the part of the shipbuilders he comes pretty close to seeing red, whether or not he voices his views in public—as only a few have done so far.

Aluminum Forgings Only Real 'Shortage'

Is there an aluminum shortage? Is the supply of this metal so vital to airplanes, not only for our own national defense but for export to Britain, inadequate?

Some persons say it is. Officials of the Aluminum Company have their version. But certainly there is little popular understanding of the difficulties involved in supplying aluminum parts for airplanes.

The most serious shortages, if we admit the term, are in the supply of aluminum forgings, rather than in ingots of the metal. An aluminum forging is made by hammering aluminum in two dies, one on the hammer and one on the anvil.

Making the dies for aluminum forgings is a long and complex process. Aluminum is forged at a much cooler temperature than steel and approximately three times as great power is needed to forge it. The dies must therefore be made of the hardest known steel. They are the work of skilled craftsmen.

ONE-SHIFT JOB

Because of the rigid specifications of aircraft forgings, the work of these men must be perfect. No one has ever successfully worked out a method by which more than one diemaker can work on one die.

Just stop a moment and think what that means. The artisan works his allotted number of hours in a day. Then he goes home. And it is impossible to put another man on his job in his absence. Virtually every time an attempt has been made to work two or more shifts on the construction of a particular die, the whole job has been ruined.

Making a single forging die may require from 6 to 24 weeks and the making of a more complicated die may require six to eight months. Many transport planes in service today have no more than ten or a dozen forgings. But now that military planes are being ordered by the thousand and the cost of the dies may be spread over a large number of units, forgings are being insisted upon. The latest bomber, for example, of the same general size as the transport plane with a dozen forgings, is likely to require nearer 250 forgings, each one requiring a die. Consequently long delays are unavoidable.

New Treatment Effective for Face Neuralgia

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

I HAVE seen an operation to give the patient relief from the terrible pain in the face called tic doloreux or trifacial neuralgia. I have never forgotten it and greatly wondered at the time if there was any pain severe enough to require such an extensive operation.

Fortunately the use of injections of various substances often gives relief for months and years so that fewer of these operations are now performed.

What appears to be a great advance in the treatment of this severe face neuralgia is reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association by two physicians, Drs. Henry Dorsook and M. Y. Kremers, and a dentist, Dr. C. G. Wiggins of Pasadena, Calif.

Observing the relief given by vitamin B1, in neuritis and arthritis, and in an attempt to find something less severe than operation, they decided to use vitamin B1 in a number of cases of the doloreux.

The treatment may be divided into two parts: (1) active treatment, and (2) change in the diet with the addition of certain foods. The active treatment consists of injections into the veins daily of thiamin chloride (vitamin B1). In about 25 per cent of the cases, liver extract was also injected because the patients did not respond satisfactorily to the vitamin B1, alone.

Low Starch Diet.

The diet treatment consists of a high vitamin, low starch diet, and in some cases 1 ounce daily of rice, polishes were given by mouth.

There were 58 patients treated, of which 37 were markedly improved, 15 improved, three slightly improved, and three not improved.

Dr. W. J. McCormick, Toronto, relieves cases of arthritis by means of vitamin B1. Dr. McCormick points out that it is the inability of the oxygen to reach these nerves that causes the pain. Vitamin B1 enables the oxygen to penetrate the fat or covering of the nerve and give relief.

It might be well for all who have painful joints, muscles or nerves to eat more foods containing vitamin B1. Some foods rich in vitamin B1 are whole wheat bread, brewers' yeast, peanuts, beef liver, almonds, bacon and ham.

X-Ray Examination For Tuberculosis

WHEN we were examining for the last war and the recruit was of average weight or near average weight for his build and no tuberculosis could be detected by the usual methods—striking the chest with the fingers to learn the sound, or listening with the stethoscope to get breathing sounds—the recruit was considered to have sound lungs.

An editorial in the Canadian Medical Association Journal states that "there is no need to extol the value of the X-ray in the physical examination of the lungs. To those who spend any time in the tuberculosis institutions it is only too evident that by the routine methods of 'sounding' and 'listening' one is apt to miss much. In other words, no matter what methods are used, the examination of the chest for military purposes should be carried out by the X-ray."

What would be gained? An enormous sum of money would be saved the country by preventing the entrance into the army of those whose unfitness is not detected by the ordinary or routine methods. The X-ray should become an "ordinary" method.

If, then, the army is considering the use of the X-rays as an "ordinary" method of the examination of the lungs, what about the rest of us?

When there is a tired feeling, loss of weight, persistent cough with or without an afternoon rise in temperature, it would be good sense to stop taking cough medicines and tonics and ask your physician about the X-ray examination of the chest. It is not expensive to one regularly employed and is free in most communities to those who are not employed.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—What causes pain in back, pain both sides of abdomen, and pain in back when straightening up? This is a serious health situation and your advice is needed.

A.—Pain in back and pain straightening up could be due to rheumatism or arthritis. Pain on both sides of abdomen could be due to several conditions—gas pressure because there is a double or S curve at both sides of abdomen low down. Other causes could be some disturbance in the reproductive organs.

That Space Between The Built-In Closets

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

WHAT could be a greater luxury than two extra closets in your bedroom! That is exactly what a young friend of mine thought. But, when they were built in, she was painfully conscious of their angles and the room seemed much narrower.

A wallpaper border all the way around the room helped to soften down the angles of the closets, also added an exciting color note to the plain painted walls. The chest of drawers in the upper sketch was moved to another part of the room, and the long spacious dressing table was built into the space between the closets. The top of the table and stool and the frame of the mirror were enameled porcelain blue which was one of the colors in the wallpaper border. Dotted swiss skirts were fastened on the inside of the finishing boards across the front of the table and around the stool with snap fastener tape—one side tacked to the wood and the other sewn to the skirt tops.

NOTE: Directions for making three types of dressing tables are illustrated in booklet No. 1 of the series which Mrs. Spears has prepared for our readers. Details for making the frilled lamp shades illustrated today are in No. 5, which also contains a description of the series. Each booklet illustrates 32 home-making projects and may be ordered direct from Mrs. Spears by sending her your name and address with 10c in coin for each number requested. Send order to:

Farm Prosperity Continues Rise

LaSalle Map of Business Conditions

A survey of business conditions for February reveals that prosperity is steadily rising. Increased industrial employment is stimulating demand for farm products. The resultant larger farm purchasing power is raising demand for manufactured products. Meanwhile many prices are gradually moving higher.

By L. G. ELLIOTT (President, LaSalle Extension University)

Prosperity of the farmers is slowly improving. Farm income has again risen higher, and is now the best in 10 years. The outlook is for continued improvement as long as defense expenditures remain large.

Greater demand has pushed the prices of many products higher. The general average of the prices received by farmers is about 5 per cent above that of last year at this time. The trend continues to be slowly upward with only temporary interruptions.

Effects of expansion in industry and larger consumer incomes are rapidly spreading out into every community.

Consumer purchasing power has been most strikingly reflected in recent weeks by the heavy buying in retail stores, both in cities and in rural districts. Sales have declined from the high holiday peak but they are still from 10 to 15 per cent higher than a year ago.

Wills had drawn a dozen maps of this region, he had plotted it from aerial photographs, and every line of these was engraved on his mind. There were the tremendous summits to the north and west, there was this ridge, sloping southward and eastward, where Hazel Fork went splashing down to meet the river. It all had form, it fitted in with the thought that had entered his mind when he studied the little map in Virgie Morgan's desk. So many of the surveys had been haphazard, so much had been done that had to be done again.

"Stop here a minute," he said, "just here. I'll walk a little way." He unfolded the map again. He had drawn it, sitting up most of the night, drawn it from sketchy bits in the note-book that remained in his pocket. All his material had gone on to Washington, but he felt that he had enough.

Slowly he walked, studying the terrain below. Above, on the narrow road, where first Virgie Morgan had seen the two men in the black car, Marian sat now, behind the wheel, looking small and lonely. For an hour, he scouted the crest, and the sun climbed higher. Icicles melted on the southern slopes and the faces of the crags began to drip. Down the gullies little streams ran clear, finding their way through a lacy network of ice. On a muddy bank, where he leaped across, was a deer track, lately made, clean-printed and plain.

He returned to the car and Marian sighed patiently, as she set the motor going again.

"Now where?"

"Can we get down under—down there where the big trees are?"

"We'll have to go far around. Some of it will be rough. But I know the way. I used to come in here with Tom."

She fell silent, as they followed the rough woods track, thinking of Tom. Just down there he must have hidden, those two days—and below, through the cathedral trees, ran the abandoned road where Cragg and the others had come in. A heavy pain bothered her when she thought that Tom probably would never see his beloved trees again. Never see the hills again, perhaps—or the shabby old mill that he had loved—never hear again the crow's shrill defiance or the answering insolence of the mountain raven.

It was noon when they reached the lower slope of the ridge, and the sun had warmed and gilded the rocks with a false promise of spring.

"Look here, you must be starved," Wills exclaimed suddenly. "Is there any place near where we can get some sandwiches, or something?"

"Lottie made sandwiches. They're back here and there's some coffee."

"Saved! I was a chump not to think of it myself."

The coffee was not hot.

"Would the lady who owns the stewpan mind if we blacken the bottom of it?" Wills asked. "I can make a fire."

"Lottie can scour it."

If only things were different, Marian thought wistfully, what fun this would be! If only he were not so arrogant and so cold—if only she did not detest him. Wills built a small fire, expertly, between two up-ended racks. Then he thrust a stick into a crevice and hung a white handkerchief on it.

"Truce!" he announced. "The war is temporarily suspended while the combatants are fed."

"Only one cup," said Marian. "So—what do we do?"

"Pour your half back into the bottle. Then you drink from the cup and I imbibe from the stewpan."

"It's hot."

"In camps where I've dined we used empty bean cans. Gives a rich pork-and-catsup flavor to the brew."

A winter sparrow came and teetered on a sumac bough, making small inquiry as to whether any crumbs would remain. The sun lay ardently on the face of the rock and Marian held her palms to it, catching the warmth in cupped, pink fingers.

Her head was cocked like the bird's, her eyes were cool and remote. Wills looked at her and his heart gave a savage, hurting clutch. His spine straightened and a grim line hardened around his mouth. He was not defeated. Now she was as far from him as the moon—but when a man had caught a precious dream in his heart it was not easy to let it go. Today she was the daughter of the Morgan mills—and he was an employee in corduroy pants. Tomorrow—he clamped his teeth and flung a challenge to tomorrow. And suddenly he cleared his throat roughly.

Intolerable—to sit here in a forest silence with her disdain, with her eyes on him in cool indifference.

He flung the crust to the waiting sparrow, stood up.

"You needn't speak," he said, hoarsely. "I know how you feel—how you despise me. But I'm going to tell you this—if I never say another word to you as long as we live. I tell in love with you—the first time I ever saw you. I haven't changed. I realize who you are—and who I am—just a tramp that your mother rescued from a mountain thicket! I know what you've been thinking. It doesn't change. Nothing will change me—ever. And I'm not giving up."

She stood up, slowly, let her eyes come up slowly. There was an odd little beating at the base of her throat, and for an instant her eyelids trembled mistily.

Then she gave a choky little sound.

"I'm going home," she said and turned and ran without looking back.

The car door slammed. The motor roared and she tore down the rutty track, jolting and bouncing for a hundred yards. Wills sat still on the rock, turning a cigarette slowly round and round in his fingers.

Then as suddenly as she had started, Marian stopped the car, backed it slowly.

"Get in," she ordered.

He gathered up the stewpan and the thermos bottle.

"Get in—and don't talk to me," she repeated, huskily keeping her eyes straight ahead.

Her profile was as unyielding as the line of the distant mountains.

She could manage humble men and make important ones respect her.

She was David Morgan's daughter—and she was finding it hard to surrender.

All the way back to the mill she kept her eyes grimly on the road. Wills sat silent, but his heart was leaping wildly, and a little smile twisted the corner of his mouth.

She was built, fine and gallant and loyal, as a silver sword. She cut from a golden width of the fabric of dream. For a dream like that a man could wait a lifetime—joyfully!

Virgie went to the mill that Saturday morning, with her face set like the face on a monument.

She had argued with herself through long hours of darkness. Why was she being such a fool, being thrown into a tense panic by Wallace Withers? She could mill pulp and she could sell it; she had proved that. She could borrow money and pay it back. She could manage humble men and make important ones respect her. Even if Wallace bought up her notes, she could pay. She had kept her credit good. The mill would run on.

David would have laughed at Wallace Withers—or smiled his dry, one-sided smile, for David had seldom laughed. He had been intent and grave and fiery, like Marian. But he fought an army of enemies and come through. His mill should run on.

Very high-headed, Virgie climbed the steps of her office. And there Lucy Fields looked at her with a tragic face.

"The West Virginia people have canceled," she said.

"What?"

"The West Virginia order—they canceled by wire this morning."

"But—their stuff is already milled! It's practically ready to go. What reason did they give?"

"None at all. It was a very short message. They canceled," Lucy was wan-faced. Her fingers were uncertain as she opened a trapdoor and indicated a paragraph. "I just saw this. Do you think it could have had anything to do with it?"

Virgie scanned the column. The paragraph Lucy pointed out, was headed, "MORGAN PEOPLE IN TROUBLE." The Morgan mills, so the type stated, were experiencing serious labor trouble, the outgrowth of a shooting affair on the property of the company. Mr. Gordon Cragg, prominent financier and timber magnate, so the story ran, had been shot and dangerously wounded by Thomas Pruitt, superintendent of the Morgan plant.

"Somebody ought to show this to Tom," Virgie commented, flatly. "I don't suppose anybody ever called him Thomas in his life."

"But we depended on that West Virginia order," Lucy worried.

"They've never canceled before—I just looked through the files. They've been buying from us for eighteen years. We depend on that order for the tax money."

"I'll have to go up there, I suppose—and argue with them," Virgie sat erect again. At least here was something that could be done. Something definite and on the offensive. "Go get him, Lucy."

While Lucy was gone across the yard, Virgie thumbed the mail over swiftly, scarcely seeing the type that her eye ran over. On Monday Tom would go on trial before a jury.

"And any sentence will kill him—so it would be kinder to hang him and be done with it," she had answered that.

What troubled her most was her own ineffectiveness. She had been fiercely boastful, she had defied the world, as the Irish are so prone to do; she had talked widely and magnificently about saving Tom—of saving the mill and being undismayed by Wallace Withers, and now every recurring blow left her more helpless, more inarticulate, futile, pathetic.

It was a sickening spectacle for a proud woman to contemplate. It was worse for an honest woman who could not bring herself to stoop to alibis. Up to now, she had been able to do nothing to stem this tide of disaster. Somehow, of course, Payne and Hooper and Wallace Withers were behind this newest catastrophe. She gave Wallace credit—he was overlooking nothing.

Lucy came back, followed by Stanley Daniels.

Virgie regarded her chemist, her mouth drawn severely straight.

"For a working man," she said, "you're very elegant, this morning!"

Daniels wore his good clothes, a clean shirt, a jaunty tie. He was a trifle pale, but he faced her coolly.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Morgan," he said. "But—I'm not working today. I was checking over the laboratory. I am resigning my position with you—today!"

Virgie let the old octagonal clock tick off a measured minute, while she looked him up and down. Lucy stood like a statue, white as death, motionless, hardly breathing.

"So—they got you, too, did they?" Virgie said, presently.

Daniels flushed, then the blood drained out of his face.

"My—decision has not been influenced by anyone," he said, stiffly.

"I have felt—for some time—that I did not have your confidence, Mrs. Morgan. Chemistry is a responsibility—a serious responsibility. I feel that I don't wish to assume that responsibility any longer in a plant where I'm not—trusted."

"Who distrusts you?" Virgie countered, her eyes as frigid as his.

He was manifestly uncomfortable. Lucy drew a little strangling breath, her hands at her throat.

"You—were very plainly suspicious of me, Mrs. Morgan—when we lost that pulp. And your attitude yesterday—and before that—"

"How much," Virgie cut in, "did Wallace Withers pay you to make that speech?"

Daniels glared, affrontedly.

"I have not been paid—certainly not by Mr. Withers!"

Virgie reached for the telephone. "Call Julia Gill for me, Mildred," she said into it evenly. "Julia? This is Virgie Morgan. Was Wallace Withers in town last night? Oh, he came there to see Mr. Daniels, did he? Much obliged. No—that's all." She hung up.

Stanley Daniels' eyes were blazing.

"I—think I have a right to—my own affairs," he said, "on my own time—without being spied on—or catechized!"

"All the right in the world," Virgie's tone was wooden. "The right to cheat and do sabotage—and destroy the people who have depended on you! The right to disappoint people who look for something decent and square in this younger generation."

"I haven't cheated! I didn't touch that pulp—oh, what's the use? You wouldn't believe me anyway!"

"No," Virgie was patient, "probably I wouldn't. I'm just a stupid old woman. I believe what I see—and what I hear. I see you deserting me—and I hear that you've been in communication with the man who brags that he's going to ruin me. I add up two and two in my naive, outmoded way—and I get a plain answer. Now—I'll tell you something, Daniels. I did suspect you—at first. I overcame it—because I want to believe in young people. I called you in here just now to send you off on an errand of importance to me—because I hoped you'd do it well—because I thought you'd be glad of the chance to prove yourself to me. But—all that's ended. Talk is no use. You can check out. Take the inventory over, Lucy—and check him out."

"You'd better check carefully," Daniels flared. "Probably I've been stealing from you, too!"

"The person you've been stealing from," said Virgie, with a heavy patience, "is yourself!"

"Oh, please—I can't!" faltered Lucy.

"I said—go over and check him out," repeated Virgie, evenly, "and remember—all the tragedies aren't played in the Little Theatre!"

At the laboratory door, Lucy turned on Daniels a livid face. "How can you do a thing like this—to her?"

He flushed angrily. "What chance did I have? I could have explained—but she wouldn't have listened. You heard her give me the third degree—telephoning Mrs. Gill."

"You could have explained what? What was there to explain?"

"I could have explained why Withers was there. He—framed me. He would have ruined me. He led me on to talk—he got information out of me—formulas—"

"You told him what to put in a digester to ruin a batch of pulp!" Lucy was all white scorn. "You were just talking—to be interesting—because he made you think you were important. And then when he took the information he got from you—and hired those low-down Spain boys to do the work, probably—"

"How do you know?"

"I don't know. But—it adds up, doesn't it? And then he threatened you—I think you're cheap!" she blazed at him. "I think you're—yellow! And—I was in love with you! I—suffered because you didn't care! It—makes me sick now when I think about it."

He flung the door back. The flat, acrid chemical smell rushed at them. This had been his world—the place where he had ruled men and processes, by the power of his moving thumbs over a test-tube, by the might of figures written on ruled sheets, by his word. For years he had been supreme, a person of importance, knowing things other men did not know. But now he was only a lost young man stumbling into a reeking cubicle—a young man out of work.

"Hadden't you better get at that inventory?" he said, flatly, racking up test-tubes. "I'm leaving town. I don't intend sticking around here forever."

But Lucy did not stir. She stood, with the flat book under her arm, her eyes purple-black and thunderous.

"You're not going!" she slashed. "You're not going through with this. You're going to stick here—and be something—a man!"

"Sorry—I'm going."

She held the latch of the door. She was vibrant all over, like a small gray hornet.

"You're not going! There's the mill! I—despise you! When I think what a fool I've been—crying—over you—I never want to see you again. But—there's the mill. It has to go on. It has to go on. And we can't run without sulphides and magnesium and the right formulas. You're not going—because I'm going to lock you in!"

Daniels jumped too late.

She had swung with the heavy door, crashed it shut, and he heard the heavy padlock he had himself put on, clack fast on the outside.

"You're not going, Stanley Daniels," she shrieked at him through the panels. "You can sit in there and make up your mind to that! You can make up your mind to—be a man! You're going to stay in there—till I get good and ready to let you out!"

He dragged at the door, beat unavailingly on the heavy panels. He swore at her.

"You crazy little fool!" he shouted. "You crazy devil!"

But she was gone. He kicked the panels in wrath, but the effort was wasted and he knew it.

Heavily he sank on the greasy stool, watched an upset bottle of acid trickle slowly to the floor.

Who would have thought that quiet, mousy little thing had so much fire in her? His anger relaxed a little. He had been sick, shaken and miserable with a mixture of shame and dread all night. Toward dawn he had decided that the only thing to do was to leave town.

But now his neck stiffened a little, his jaw set. So—she thought he was yellow, did she—the spunky little devil? He'd show her—he went to the door and gave it a resounding kick.

CHAPTER XVII

The lawyer who came at noon, with Wallace Withers, was a suave stranger.

He was, so he stated, from Baltimore. He represented the Messrs. Payne, Cragg, and Hooper.

"And Withers," added Virgie.

"I do not represent Mr. Withers. I am not connected with the local enterprises of my clients, Mrs. Morgan. I am retained to prosecute a suit for damages for Mr. Cragg against you—superintendent, I believe—Mr. Thomas Pruitt."

"You didn't overlook anything, did you?" drawled Virgie.

"It is the function of an efficient attorney to overlook nothing. Very wisely, we think, Mr. Pruitt accepted our advice—which was to settle out of court. With more serious action pending it would be unfortunate for him to be involved also in civil matters, to which he could not give his attention. So he decided to make suitable settlement with my client, Mr. Cragg, and I have here—"

He unfolded a paper—"an order upon you, Mrs. Morgan, to deliver to me fifty shares of stock in the Morgan mills—the property of Mr. Pruitt."

Virgie sprang up.

JESUS CALLS TO PRAYER

LESSON TEXT—Luke 18:1-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—Lord, teach us to pray.
—Luke 11:1.

Imitations may be so clever as to cause us to marvel, but to the one who knows the real thing, they are "just imitations." Particularly is that true in the realm of the spiritual. Make-believe faith in God fools only the hypocrite and those who know as little as he does of real Christianity.

Prayer is undoubtedly the greatest privilege of the Christian, putting him and his life in touch with the omnipotence of God. But it must be real prayer, not just some formal exercise which masquerades under the name of prayer. We combine the two parables of our lesson to contrast prevailing prayer and powerless prayer.

1. Prevailing Prayer.

The prayer which really lays hold upon God and brings results must be the expression of a life of prayer. It is no occasional effort brought about by a great need or a deep sorrow. We must pray

1. Without Ceasing (v. 1). Jesus had just been talking of the trying days which were to come (Luke 17:26-30). To stand fast for Christ in a day when almost all the influences are against such faith, a man needs real prayer or he will surely faint.

To pray constantly is not necessarily to be saying the words of prayer, but is the outreach of the life toward God, the setting of our minds on things above. That we can and may do at all times and in all places.

2. With Assurance (vv. 2-9). If an unjust judge will respond just to escape the constant plea of a widow, we may rest assured that God, who is just and looks upon His people in loving-kindness, will not fail to respond to their plea. He says, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not" (Jer. 33:3).

3. In Humility (vv. 13, 14). We come to God, not to demand, but to humbly plead the blood of Jesus Christ. That was what the publican did. When he said, "Lord, be merciful," he used the word "propitiated," which refers to the mercy seat on which the blood was sprinkled as a propitiation for sin (see Exod. 25:17, 18, 21; Heb. 9:5; Lev. 16:5). Such a plea brought salvation to the repentant sinner.

II. Powerless Prayer.

We use the word prayer here in the broad sense, for strictly speaking there is no such thing as prayer without power. Men call it prayer, but it accomplishes nothing because it is offered

1. In Self-sufficiency (vv. 9, 11). Those who trust "in themselves" will naturally do what the Pharisee did; he "prayed with himself." He had an intellectual conviction, but that does not make a contact with God. Hell is full of intellectual conviction. God? Oh, yes. But he was so occupied with himself he could not get away from himself" (Morgan).

2. With Boastful Pride (vv. 9, 11, 12). Despising others, the Pharisee boasted of his own fine character and good works. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble" (James 4:6). It is proper that a man should live uprightly, but if it only makes him self-righteous it becomes a barrier between him and God (Luke 18:14).

3. For the Sake of Publicity (v. 11, cf. v. 13). While the publican huffed his head and stood afar off to offer his prayer, the Pharisee apparently took a prominent place and spoke with a loud voice. Jesus described that kind of prayers in Matthew 6:5 as just putting on a publicity "stunt." When men had seen them pray, the transaction was finished. They had not been in touch with God at all.

The result of the two prayers is so well described by Dr. J. Campbell Morgan that we quote his words:

"Two men at prayer. One, eloquently, in phrases circling round his own personality with which he was pre-eminently pleased. The other, hating his sin, and grasping out after the infinite and tender compassion of God to operate for him. The man who justified himself remained unjustified. The man who sought the compassion of God went back to his house justified."

There Is Another Life

I cannot believe, and cannot be brought to believe, that the purpose of our creation is fulfilled by our short existence here. To me the existence of another world is a necessary supplement of this, to adjust its inequalities, and imbue it with moral significance.—Thurlof Weed.

LARGE CATTLE RECEIPTS RESULTS IN SLOW TRADE SAYS JOHN CLAY REPORT

Danger of Hoof and Mouth Disease In Bill to Import Argentine Frozen Beef

Largest receipts of cattle since the fore part of the year resulted in a slow trade at a recession in rates covering medium to good steers early this week. Heifers are arriving in large numbers and were caught in the drop. Hogs, too, eased off a little, while lambs moved up, equaling the highest basis of the season.

Importations of meat have been stepped up of late. Difficulty in getting the product to England, owing to shortage of shipping space, is responsible for the increase to the United States. There has also been a gain in the number of Canadian cattle reaching this country. Arrivals, however, are far from filling the quota allotted that country.

There is a strong movement on foot at Washington to further cement our relations with South American countries. This will ultimately result in an attempt to permit the importation of Argentine frozen beef into the United States. Every feeder in the U. S. A. must make the fight of their lives to persuade their representatives in Washington not to ratify what is known as the Argentine pact.

The ravages of foot and mouth disease are too great to permit the letting down of the bars against such beef, or even to modify the tariff covering canned beef. Vigorous protest against any change in our present relationship so far as the livestock industry is concerned with these South American countries should be lodged with Congressmen and Senators.

WCLS GROWS UP

Readers will be interested in knowing that WCLS, Joliet, will be more easily heard at a distance, beginning March 29. On this date, power will be increased to 250 watts, and the KC will change to 1340. It is suggested that owners of radios with "push button" tuning have their WCLS button changed accordingly.

THE DICTATORIAL POLICY OF THE LEND-LEASE BILL

Remarks of HON. WILLIAM G. STRATTON of Illinois In The House of Representatives January 22, 1941

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, on Monday I was moved when I heard the President tell the millions of people throughout the world that in America the republican form of government was a living thing. That we still had free elections; we still had the three great branches of government—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative. I was thrilled when he hurled forth the challenge that we are not in retreat, that we went forward. Yet, Mr. Speaker, as a new Member it is hard for me to reconcile those noble utterances with the provisions of the dictatorial policy of the lease-lend bill.

I hope that the Congress will see to it that the three branches remain the vigorous living forces that the President boasted of, and I, for one, intend to see that the powers and the prerogatives of the Congress remain in the hands of the duly elected representatives of the people.

James C. Bell, Will Co. Treasurer Explains Tax Difficulties

Urges More Co-operation In Collecting Personal Tax

In a statement released today James C. Bell, County Treasurer of Will County, said: "During the recent campaign to collect personal property taxes, the comments of many people who have written, telephoned, or called in person at the County Treasurer's office would indicate that there is a great deal of misunderstanding generally about the payment of personal taxes. Many people have the idea that personal property taxes are a joke, or something to be taken very lightly, and that they do not have to be paid. This false impression can be traced to a number of causes.

Until the last fifteen or twenty years, personal taxes were paid without question, but gradually the equitable assessment of taxes became increasingly difficult and many apparent injustices and inequalities in assessments caused popular indignation against the tax. Then the depression hit our community and for a number of years many families were absolutely unable to pay any taxes—real or personal. In addition, the tax became a political football, and many thousands of people well able to pay were told to "forget it." The scandal connected with the County Treasurer's office in recent years has further contributed to almost a complete break-down of the tax structure, with a serious loss of revenue to the County. Finally, because of the unpopularity of the tax, many former County Treasurer's refused to enforce collection, fearing it would be "political dynamite." This attitude led many people to believe that the law could not, and would not, be enforced.

The Constitution of the State of Illinois provides for the levying and collecting of a personal property tax, and the penalty for failure to pay it is extremely heavy. While most people recognize that the personal property tax law has not worked out well and should be abolished, it is a part of the Constitution and cannot be eliminated without a constitutional amendment.

In Will County, approximately one-fifth of the revenue for the schools, the tuberculosis sanatorium, the County, Township, and the City governments (328 different units of local government, to be exact) comes from personal property taxes. If the County Collector were to ignore the law, as some people short-sightedly suggest, it would not only be a serious violation of his sworn duty but it would put every unit of our local government in the "nine hole" for several years, or until the entire load of government could be shifted to the backs of the real property owner. This would be absolutely unjust. Real Estate taxpayers in Will County are already carrying a heavy load—a heavier load than they rightfully should have to carry, when you consider that there is as much, or more, wealth in intangible property which pays nothing toward the cost of our local government.

There is only one thing to do, under the circumstances, and that is to collect the personal property tax without favor or partiality from all people who are working or have incomes and are able to pay it. That is what we are attempting to do, and that is what we are going to continue to do.

We have tried to be lenient with people who honestly cannot pay. We recognize that there are many people who are still unemployed, many hundreds of others who are on relief or in necessitous circumstances, and still others—widows and old people with little or no income—from whom it would be a great injustice to force payment by distraint. We have never, knowingly, forced anyone to pay taxes where his condition was so extenuating that he could not rightfully and reasonably have been expected to pay. If the Assessor puts an assessment on the books against anyone, it is our duty to send him a bill and to try to collect the tax. If, for any reason, he cannot pay it, he at least owes the Collector the courtesy of some explanation. The law requires that the Collector must give in writing an explanation on his books for every tax that is not collected. If people do not tell us their circumstances when they are unable to pay their taxes, how can they expect us—in a county of 115,000 population—to know their condition.

The County, at great expense, publishes yearly the entire personal tax assessment roll. The reason for this is to inform the taxpayer publicly of the valuation of his property for tax purposes, as determined for that year by the Assessor. Another reason for its publication is to afford people an opportunity to ascertain if their valuations are fair and equitable by comparison with other properties of comparable value with which they are familiar. It is then the duty of anyone who considers his assessment to be unjust to protest to the Board of Review which—at further expense to the County—sits to receive such complaints daily, usually from the second week in June to the first week in December. If such complaint is not filed, the law assumes that the taxpayer is satisfied, and the County Clerk proceeds to enter the tax upon the Collector's books, and to charge the Collector with the collection of such taxes. The taxpayer has no further legal recourse if he fails to file such a complaint. Yet we have many people who refuse or neglect to take advantage of this opportunity to seek adjustment of an assessment which they consider unfair. Many of these same people "raise the roof" and consider it a personal offense when we attempt to collect the tax. We cannot possibly appraise the fairness of every assessment in Will County. Even if a tax may appear unfair to us, we have no authority to change it. Our duty is solely to collect the taxes as assessed.

Paying taxes is not a pleasant duty for anyone—for most people it is a burden that entails some hardship and often sacrifice, but fair-minded men and women surely must realize that it is their duty to pay their taxes, if possible, just as it is my duty to collect them, if possible. It is obvious that, in a measure, local government functions efficiently or poorly—depending upon our mutual performance of these duties.

We cannot countenance the perpetuation of a condition where 95 per cent of the people in the townships of this County outside of Joliet pay their personal property taxes while more than 65 per cent of the people in Joliet flagrantly disregard the same obligation year after year. We cannot make "fish" out of one taxpayer and "fowl" out of another, even if other men have played this reprehensible kind of favoritism and politics in the past.

It is the job of the County Treasurer to collect the taxes, as levied, to run our local government, and we will sincerely appreciate the co-operation and help of every taxpayer to that end."

JAMES C. BELL,
County Treasurer.

SELECTIVE SERVICE LAW IS BIG AID TO CUPID

Paul G. Armstrong, state director, asserted the operation of the Selective Service law in Illinois has brought to light an increasing number of instances in which local boards have been instrumental in reconciling estranged husbands and wives and in causing couples living together without benefit of matrimony to get married.

One young man, 24 years old and unmarried, claimed deferment on the ground that he was to become a father. His local board refused to defer him until he produced evidence that he had married the mother of the expected child. Within a few days the young man appeared before the board with his bride and a wedding certificate.

Another case, typical of any, was that of a man, estranged from his wife and child, who claimed deferment because he was contributing to the support of the child. The wife was called in to substantiate the claim. During the ensuing conference the wife and husband were reconciled and are now reported living happily together again.

In cases such as these, Mr. Armstrong said, the Selective Service boards are definitely contributing a valuable service to the general welfare of Illinois communities as well as to the individuals involved.

THE ANSWER TO A HOSTESS' PRAYER.
(See Recipes Below)

TAKE A PEEK AT YOUR PASTRY

Many a cook who shines brightly at cake-baking sadly admits that she doesn't have the knack of making flaky, melt-in-the-mouth pastry. She feels that it is something she can't help, like the color of her eyes or her hair. But a careful look at her pie crust through a magnifying glass or microscope often gives a clue as to what is the matter.

Flaky pastry is made up of many, many thin layers of dough separated by long, thin air pockets or spaces formed when the layers of fat and flour are separated by steam during the baking.

Part of this flakiness depends upon the manner in which the fat is cut into the flour and part upon the handling of the dough. If a part of the fat is rubbed in with the fingers or a pastry blender, until it is in very small particles and is evenly distributed throughout all of the flour; and if the remainder of the fat is cut in so that it is in fairly large pieces about the size of navy beans or peas, then the crust has an excellent chance of being both tender and flaky. The large pieces of fat separate the flour into layers, while the small particles tend to make the dough more tender.

If all the fat is distributed in small particles the crust is apt to be "crumbly" rather than flaky.

To this fat and flour mixture is added the water, a procedure which is best accomplished with a fork.

The dough is worked lightly together into a ball so that it can be rolled out. Overhanding at this point foreshadows a tough crust, yet the dough must be kneaded enough so that it will stick together and form a smooth sheet under the rolling pin. A slightly richer formula—a proportion of $\frac{1}{2}$ cup of fat to 1 cup of flour instead of the usual $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of fat to 1 cup of flour, makes it possible to handle the pastry dough more without toughening it appreciably.

Orange Meringue Pie.

1 cup sugar
5 tablespoons cornstarch
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon shredded orange peel
2 cups orange juice
3 egg yolks
1 tablespoon butter
2 tablespoons lemon juice
Orange pastry pie shell
3 egg whites
6 tablespoons sugar
1 orange

Mix sugar, cornstarch and salt, add orange peel and juice and cook in double boiler until thickened, about 15 minutes. Add beaten egg yolks and cook 2 minutes. Remove from heat and add butter and lemon juice. Cool. Pour into 9-inch Orange Pastry pie shell. Cover with meringue, made of egg whites beaten stiff with sugar. Brown in moderate oven (325 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 15 minutes. Decorate top of pie with sections from orange. Peel fruit with sharp knife, removing skin and inner membrane down to juicy meat. Cut out on each side of dividing membrane and lift out section by section.

Deep Dish Apple Pie.

(Serves 6)
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups sugar
2 cups apples (sliced thin)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup water
 $\frac{3}{4}$ cup raisins
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup orange juice
1 teaspoon orange rind (grated)
1 teaspoon cinnamon
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon cloves
1 cup walnut meats (chopped)
 $\frac{3}{4}$ cup general purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
1 egg
Combine 1 cup sugar, the apples, water, raisins, orange juice, orange rind, cinnamon, cloves and cook over a low flame for about 15 minutes. Remove from fire and add nuts. Pour into a shallow greased baking dish. Mix following ingredients lightly with a fork: the flour, remaining $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sugar, baking powder, salt, and the egg and sprinkle over apple mixture. Place in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) and bake for approximately 30 minutes.

Orange Pastry.

1 cup sifted flour
2 teaspoons sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon shredded orange peel
6 tablespoons shortening
2-3 tablespoons orange juice (about)
Sift flour, sugar, salt. Add orange peel. Cut shortening in coarsely. Add gradually just enough orange juice to bind dough together. Roll pastry out thin and line pie plates. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) for 15 minutes. (Makes 9-inch pie shell.)

Individual Chess Pies.

(Makes 7 tarts)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup butter
1 cup sugar
3 egg yolks
1 whole egg
1 cup raisins (coarsely chopped)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup nuts (coarsely chopped)
2 tablespoons lemon juice
3 egg whites
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
6 tablespoons sugar

Cream butter until soft and light. Add sugar gradually, creaming until mixture is fluffy. Beat together egg yolks and whole egg with rotary beater. Cream with creamed mixture and then add raisins, walnuts, and lemon juice. Place mixture in top of double boiler and cook over boiling water, stirring constantly until thick, about 25 to 30 minutes.

When filling has thickened fill individual baked pastry shells ($3\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter across top). Beat egg whites until foamy, then add salt and sugar gradually, and continue beating until meringue will stand in stiff points. Place tarts in moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 10 minutes or until lightly browned.

Make pastry using one cup flour for tart shells.

Horn o' Plenty Pie.

(Makes 2 9-inch pies)
1 9-ounce package mincemeat
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups water
3 tablespoons sugar
1 cup canned pumpkin
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ginger
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon cloves
2 teaspoons cinnamon
3 eggs
1 15-ounce can condensed milk
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup water

Break mincemeat into pieces, place in saucepan, add water and sugar. Bring to a boil and boil 1 minute. Cool. Thoroughly mix pumpkin, salt, spices, eggs condensed milk and water. Add cooled mincemeat and blend thoroughly. Pour into unbaked 9-inch pie shells. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) 10 minutes, reduce temperature to moderate (350 degrees Fahrenheit) and bake about 35 minutes longer, or until filling is set.

Toasted Coconut-Butterscotch Pie.
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups light brown sugar
 $\frac{3}{4}$ cup bread flour
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{3}{4}$ cup cold milk
2 egg yolks
 $2\frac{1}{4}$ cups scalded milk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
Coconut

Mix sugar, flour and salt. Add cold milk slowly. Blend until smooth. Beat egg yolks slightly and add to first mixture. Add the scalded milk slowly. Place mixture in double boiler and cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture thickens. Remove from heat. Add vanilla extract and pour into baked pie shell. Cool. Just before serving top with whipped cream and sprinkle with toasted coconut.

BIG CITY BLACKOUT

The move for a blackout test of New York continues, but this department is against it. More people would get hurt by the blackout than by any enemy attack. New Yorkers, as Elmer Twitchell pointed out today, can't even get around safely with all the lights on.

And then, too, there's the question of morale. What would a New Yorker do if he couldn't be seen by anybody?

What would happen to a genuine Manhattanite if he suddenly found there wasn't a light on him or near him? "No sir, it would never work in a city like New York," Mr. Twitchell insisted. "Think of what would happen to the stamina of those thousands of New Yorkers who live in night clubs if this blackout comes! If they couldn't find the night clubs, they'd be in a bad way. And what would be even worse, suppose they got into a night club and then couldn't be seen in 'em by the columnists!"

Mr. Twitchell was terribly worked up. "Take the matter of photographs," he continued. "Pictures can't be taken during a complete blackout. There must be a couple million New Yorkers who lose weight and go into a decline if they ain't photographed wherever they go."

"If they have to leave their apartments without being seen, travel to the theater without being seen, and even enter it and leave it without being noticed or photographed, can you imagine what would happen to their morale!"

"I tell you there are tens of thousands of New Yorkers who can't even sit at a dinner table and have a cocktail in complete happiness unless a snapshot is taken. Ask all these classes to go to a night in complete oblivion, and what will they do? Revolt, that's what. And there's no telling how far a revolt in New York by people who demand the spotlight might go. It might spread all over America."

"And there's the matter of some of our big personalities. What would be the reactions of Elsa Maxwell, Billy Rose, Jimmy Walker, Dot Parker, Tom Dewey or Mayor La Guardia in the blackout? They'd curl right up and expire."

"The same thing goes for the rank and file. What do New Yorkers live on? Delicatessen products. Where do they get 'em? Delicatessen and drug stores. How would they find these stores without all those red, green and yellow lights on 'em? Why, they'd starve to death in 48 hours. Blackout of New York! It's a crazy idea. Why, the enemy could locate the city by the loud squawks, wails, protests and letters to the editor."

SEWING CIRCLE

NO WONDER there's a prideful prance in this youngster's step as she goes forward to more and better playtimes. It's the frock she's proud of—any little girl will be proud of it, and there's no reason why your own daughter shouldn't have half a dozen just such, because it's so easy to make. Take a look at the small diagram drawing, to convince yourself how quickly and simply you can finish it.

Design No. 8840 is easy for even a two-year old to get into all by herself, because it goes on like a coat and buttons all down the front. Its princess lines are accented by sweeps of ric-rac up and down, the neckline is finished with a little notched collar, and panties are included, of course.

Pattern No. 8840 is designed for sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. Size 3 requires, with long sleeves, 2 yards of 35-inch ging-ham, percale or linen; with short sleeves, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ yards; 9 yards of ric-rac. Send order to:

Mary Was Looking for Another Way Out!

The housewife was showing her new maid through the upstairs rooms. Finally, they came to a staircase leading down.

"Now, Mary," said the housewife, stepping on to the landing, "when you wish to pass down to the garden, go down this way."

At that moment she slipped, and was precipitated to the bottom.

"Good gracious, mum!" gasped the maid, "Are ye hurt?"

"No; it's nothing," came the reply, as the dishevelled mistress rose to her feet.

"Then ye've got down it fine, mum!" declared the girl. "But if that's the way I've got to go down, the job's too strenuous for me!"

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

If curtains are dry before being starched they will keep clear longer.

To remove grease marks from book pages: Sponge with benzene, then place pages between blotting paper and press with hot iron.

Hot pans should never be set on porcelain surfaces as the heat cracks the porcelain.

To lime your house plants, save all egg shells. Keep the shells in a jar of cold water and use the water on the plants.

Does your ball of knitting yarn insist on running away? Put a ball of yarn in a small box with a tightly fitting lid that has a small hole cut in it. Put the end of the yarn through the hole after the cover is in place. Your yarn will pull out easily and will be clean and free of tangles.

Turn the handles of pots and pans on the stove out of reach of small children.

When plates or dishes are burned after baking they can be easily cleaned by rubbing them with a cloth dipped in salt.

To remove printing from flour bags, cover bags with kerosene and let soak 24 hours; then cover with cold water, naphtha soap cut up fine, and bring to boil. Boil 20 minutes; then wash on washboard as you would anything. If the color isn't all out put in cold water, naphtha soap and a little kerosene and boil again.

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.
Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!
